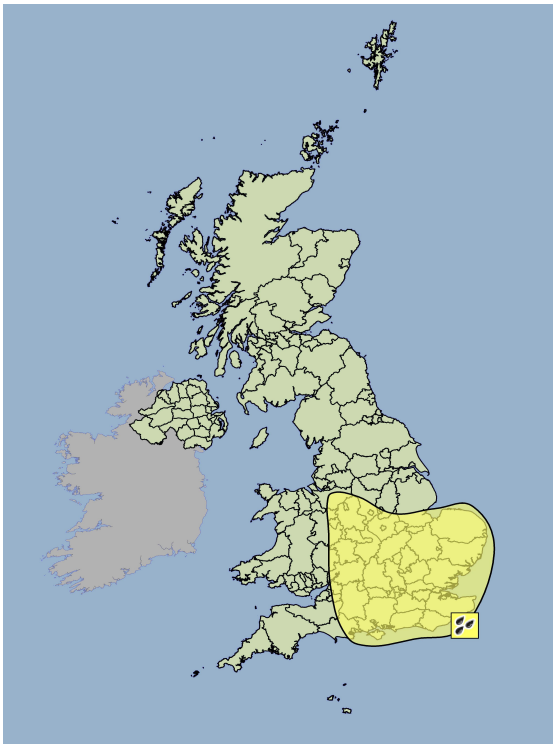
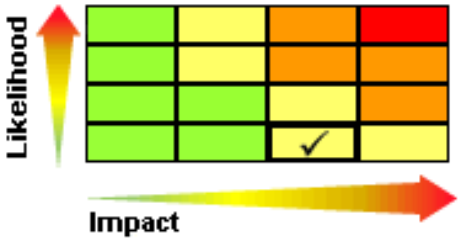
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
The humid, unstable airmass across southern Britain will remain in place through Friday night and into Saturday. Scattered heavy showers and thunderstorms are therefore likely to continue to affect some areas. Many places will miss these storms, but where they do occur we are likely to see up to 30 mm rainfall in a short space of time, whilst lightning and hail may be additional hazards.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 00:15 on Sat, 20th Sep 2014 until 10:00 on Sat, 20th Sep 2014

Further heavy showers and thunderstorms are likely to continue through Friday night and into Saturday morning, with the main risk receding eastwards to become mostly confined to the east of the yellow area by then.

The public should be aware of the potential for isolated disruption due to surface water flooding and lightning strikes.
